(b) if so, what are the details in this regard;

(c) whether all the State Governments are not agreeable for creation of such an agency; and

(d) if so, what steps are being taken by the Central Government to persuade them for the informaiton of the FLEA?

THE MINISTER OF STATE IN THE MINISTRY OF HOME AFFAIRS (SHRI I. D. SWAMI): (a) to (d) The issue of setting up a Federal Law Enforcement Agency (FLEA) to deal with certain specified offences which have inter-state and/or nation-wide ramifications was considered at length in the Union Government. It was also discussed in different fora including in the Conference of Chief Ministers on Internal Security. However, no consensus could emerge among all the States. It has been decided not to pursue the proposal for the present due to the perception of some States that this could impinge upon their sphere of responsibility with regard to the maintenance of law and order. The State Governments have however, been advised to enact legislation for the control of organized crime, on the lines of the Maharashtra Control of Organised Crimes Act. The State Governments have also been advised to set up special units for monitoring, investigating and pursuing organized criminal gangs and coordinate with counterpart units in the neighbouring States as well as in the central agencies. In order to effectively deal with the terrorist groups/activities, the Government of India have already enacted the Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002.
